

ADVANCED INTELLIGENCE COURSE

Methodology

a. Instruction is to be offered on the graduate level. There are to be no formal examinations, nor will class standing be established. Each student's progress, however, will be closely supervised by an assigned faculty advisor who will direct the student in accordance with his educational requirements and previous experience in intelligence.

b. A wide variety of educational techniques are to be employed throughout the course. Lectures by guest speakers are to be the principle means of instruction. Students will be grouped by study room so as to achieve maximum cross-Service/Agency experiences. Students will also participate in field trips, seminars, and practical exercises. Each field trip and practical exercise will be subsequently critiqued. The student will further enhance his preparation for high-level intelligence assignments by engaging in numerous briefings and consultations with the specialists in various offices both within and outside the Department of Defense. This instruction is to be further supplemented by a limited number of films and small group conference sessions.